Truth fully, I'm having a tough time with this. I don't want this to sound too self-congratulatory, but things are going alright. The Holiday Season was as good as it should have been, and we're about to finally have a couple of months off. Granted, it's because we had to cancel half of this tour due to Jason's increasingly hobbled state to get it, but there you go. More scalpels and physical therapy loom on his horizon. In the end though, walking is important, and so is promoting your rock album, but you can't do one without the other. Hopefully the mending time will provide the balance. There is a re-release of the Crystal Lake that is coming out/ came out on January 29. It has another grip of b-sides on three formats, which signifies the release of more than an album's worth of additional material in less than a year. Watch for the box set soon. Kidding. We appreciate you coming tonight, reading this, and being interested in the first place. Maybe see you outside this summer. Take Good Care.
